Manager's comments

How did your portfolio perform?

The Growth Fund delivered a gross return of -1.00% for the month of February, in line with the fund's benchmark return of -1.08%.

For the 12 months to the end of February, the Growth Fund delivered a gross return of 11.07%, underperforming the fund's benchmark return of 12.86% by -1.79%.

Cash and fixed interest delivered in line returns during considerable geopolitical uncertainty. Equity markets had a busy reporting season but were buffeted by macro events as they tried to digest the potential for trade wars and new military alignments.

We actively manage the fund's foreign currency exposures associated with Global, Australasian and listed property equities and hedge the international fixed interest segment of the fund. The NZ dollar fell -0.88% against the US dollar and fell -0.58% against the Australian dollar during the month.

What happened in the markets that you invest in?

The new U.S. government quickly introduced major policy changes, both domestically and internationally. However, its messaging has been unclear, frequently revised, and sometimes contradictory.

Tariffs typically raise costs and slow growth, as confirmed by a 2019 U.S. Federal Reserve study on the 2018 Republican tariffs. Despite strong U.S. earnings, market uncertainty and growth risks led to a decline in equities. In contrast, global and emerging markets performed better, as elections delivered clear cut results and diversification from U.S. assets.

Risks to growth would also lower inflation, and hence US fixed interest rates fell, boosting bondholder returns. The US dollar strengthened despite lower interest rates, as it is often seen as a safe haven in times of uncertainty.

In New Zealand and Australia, economic weakness from 2024 was evident in earnings reports. While we anticipated this slowdown, we did not expect the absence of clear recovery signs. The positive effects of lower inflation and interest rate cuts have yet to materialise in company revenues or profit margins. Amid government austerity in NZ and ongoing global uncertainties, investors adopted a cautious, evidence-based approach rather than relying on optimism.

What are we thinking about the future?

Uncertainty tends to drive investors toward lower-risk, lower-priced assets, currently favouring fixed interest and non-US equity markets. A severe US economic growth slowdown could pressure global equities, but we do not see this as the most likely scenario. Instead, we expect market volatility until there is greater clarity on trade tariffs, US military alliances, and a potential ceasefire in Ukraine.

The Octagon Investment Committee met on the 11th of March, making no changes to the current tactical asset allocation positions. Our existing underweight in the global equities class, based on our view of a high valuation on high profit margins was a particular focus. The volatility and recent fall in the US equity market has not yet been enough for us to start buying global equities, but we are actively monitoring the state of the US economy and the improving value on offer in that asset class as share prices fall. We remain overweight in Australasian assets, though NZ equities and listed property have been slower to recover than expected.

^{} The risk indicator is rated from 1 (low) to 7 (high). The rating reflects how much the value of the relevant fund's assets goes up and down (volatility). A higher risk generally means higher potential returns over time, but more ups and downs along the way. The risk indicator is based on the returns data for the five years to 28 February 2025.
